I know but you should still care a little. It'll also help to have some people close in age to you too who you can be pals with or meet people through. I'd really like if you had more Toronto based pals and boyfriends, you know.

None of the other places seem oppressive. But anything is probably an improvement culturally so I don't care a whole lot.

I think the culture of the place is probably very important. As Mr. Reese said, Catalyst is an oppressive environment. You'll feel lots better no matter where else you go probably.

I don't know. West Face would probably still be the #1 choice but I'd have to discuss more with the different places about what the jobs would be and what the culture and pay are like.

Would you like to work there or at the CCP?

No it's a small company. Only 5-6 people. It's a pure hedge fund so no travel and probably 60 hours a week.

Adelaide and Peter eh? Real close. No Khao San every day, or you'll turn into a cow, san. Is it a bigger company? Did it sound like something you'd like? How many hours a week do you think it is? Travelling?

He probably asked me a million questions in 40 minutes so it was tough trying to answer well when I only had a few seconds. But we'll see. It sounded nice otherwise; it's a small office and totally casual dress and it's just over on Adelaide and Peter. I could eat Khao San Road daily.

What could have been better, you didn't like them as much as you thought you would?

Met with the Anson people. Went pretty well but could've been better. Really young guys, they're all in their late 20s and early 30s and they run the place. Supposed to hear back about the next round this week.

Not an evil corporation, eh? Sounds better. I like nice people. They're the nicest. I'm going to make you a potato salad for dinner perhaps with saucise? I'll go to groceries soon.

Yes, they'd be hiring for an associate if they were at all. It sounds very interesting and everyone sounds very nice.

Did they tell you what they'd be hiring for? Does it sound like something you'd want to do?
